

The Future of The Master of Business Administration (MBA)

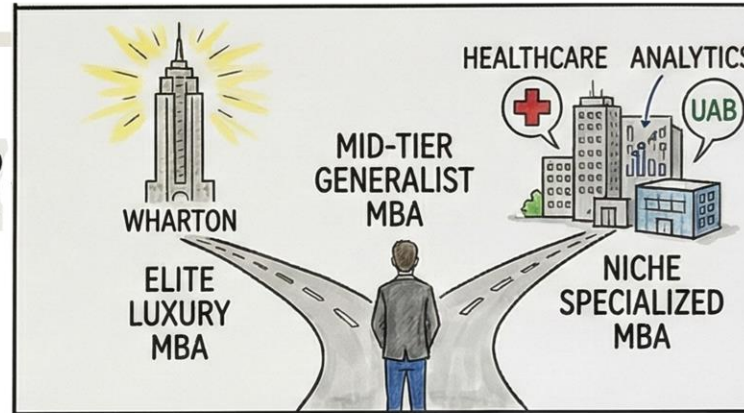

Ben Anderson

Outline of this Presentation

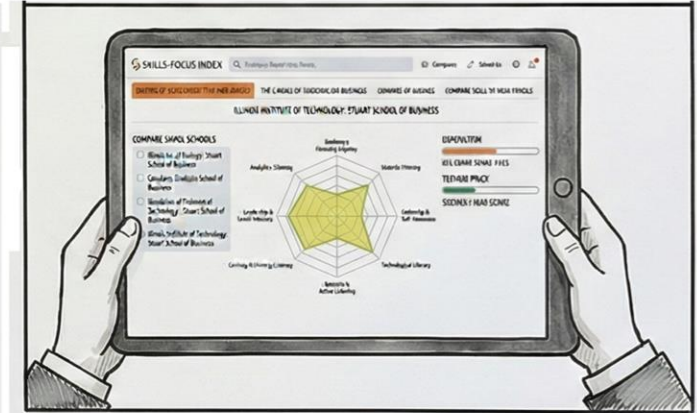

The Current Problem

The Future Vision

A Tool To Get There

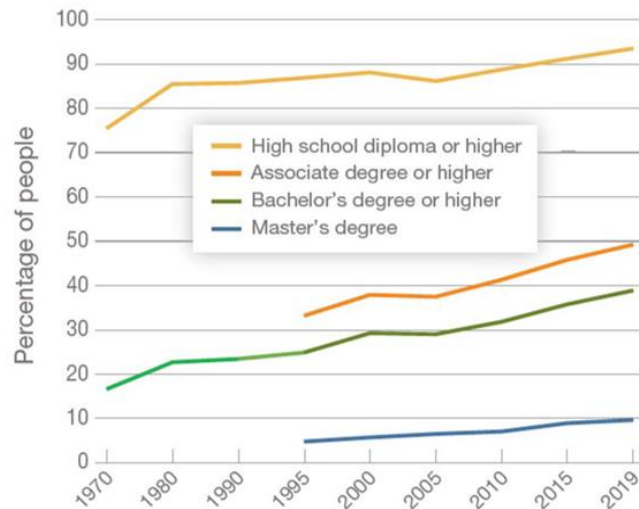

1. High Costs, Saturation & Low ROI

The MBA is experiencing rising costs, high saturation, and a median ROI of $101,000, with 39% posting negative returns (Cooper, 2024).

The Current Problem

FIGURE 1

2. Outdated Curriculum

A 2025 audit of 100 U.S. MBA programs (excludes elite MBAs) confirms a systemic failure: schools aggressively over-teach functional silos while critically under-teaching Digital Disruption, Sustainability, and Agility (Manoukian et al., 2025).

The Current Problem

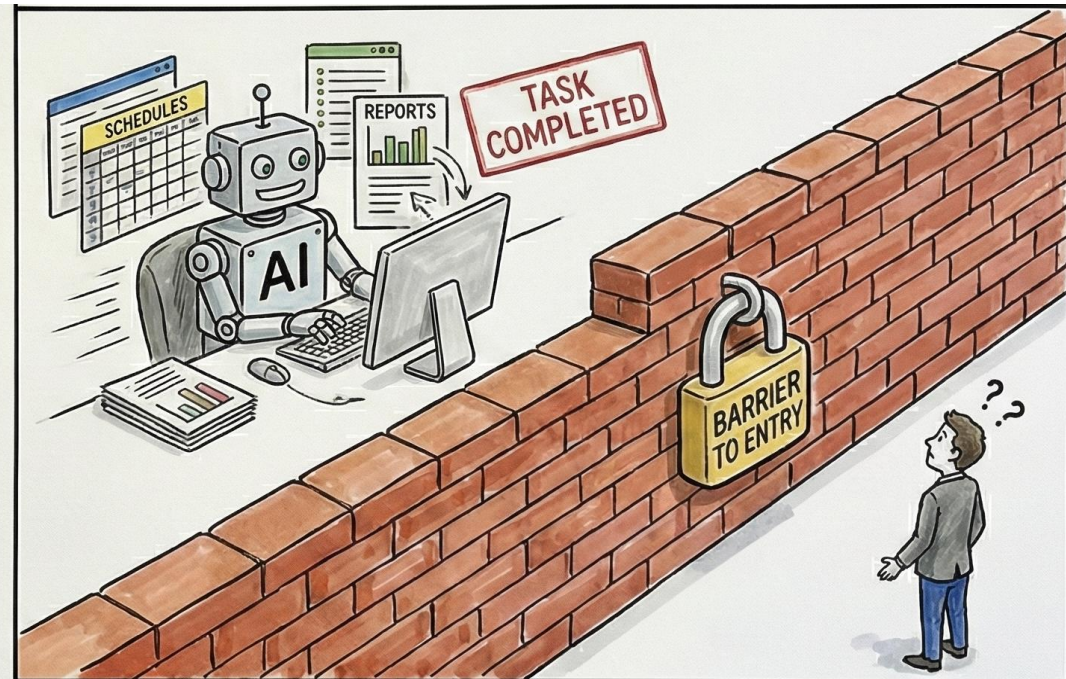

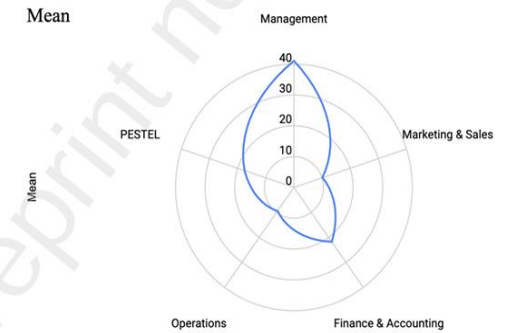

Soft skills, Hard skills & PESTEL

3. AI as a Disruptor

An MBA degree is unofficially known as a degree to manage. Now that AI can do a lot of tasks managers had, the role is changing and the barrier to entry is rising. This is a chance for MBA schools to reinvent education for an AI-augmented future (Csaszar et al., 2025).

The Prototype

A Tool To Get There

How would it work?

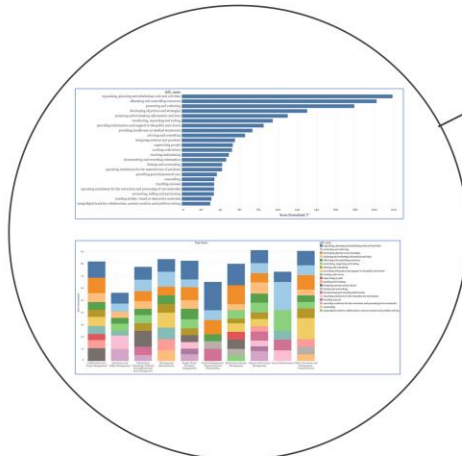

INTERVIEWS

The outdated way for schools to update curriculum

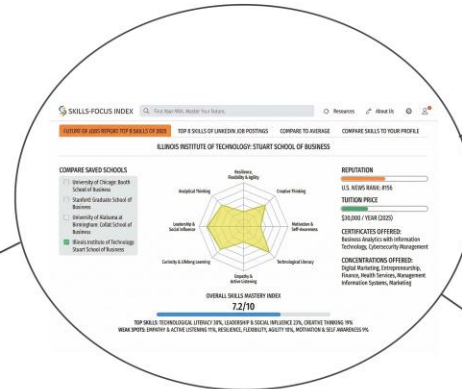

LLM

AI can be utilized to find skills that are being posted by employers on LinkedIn and other job sites (Boshkoska et al., 2025).

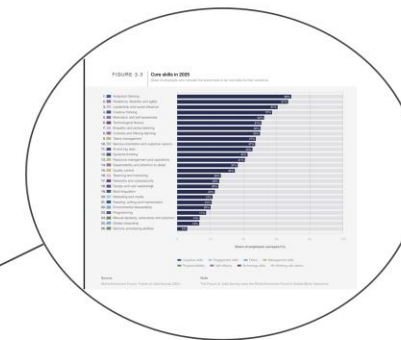

The Tool

Combines all of these factors to make skill output for colleges more transparent.

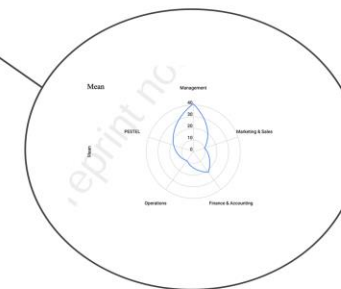

Future of Jobs Skills Report

Factor this in so the tool includes futurecasting (World Economic Forum, 2025).

Curriculum Scanning

Analyze schools curriculums to find skill output (Manoukian et al., 2025).

Which Path Forward?

An outdated degree with:

- Curriculum teaching increasingly irrelevant skills
- Value mostly based on prestige & ROI

A relevant degree with:

- Updated curriculum focusing on present & future global workforce needs
- Curriculum based on local government needs
- Value based on skill output & specialization
